

Anti-Disease Campaign

We are more in earnest than ever on this great civic question and the agitation we are doing and expect to continue to do should arouse the community regarding the average negro washerwoman who is ignorant of all sanitary laws and too often neglected by the municipality in being provided with public sanitary facilities.

Look carefully and study the cartoon below on conditions that exactly exist in our community.

Sensible citizens, how long are you going to send your clothing into these houses to be laundered? There they remain for the week and if the weather is bad they are kept indoors without being aired or given sunshine.

We do not suppose that many people have thought of the GRAVE danger of the spread of disease through this means. How many of us have investigated the house of the washerwoman who cares for our laundry?

It is needless to dwell further upon that rather unsavory aspect of the situation. We merely mention it as an additional reason why you should send your family washing to a laundry, constructed and equipped along sanitary lines.

EMPEROR WILLIAM TO VISIT MEDITERRANEAN

Imperial Yacht Under Orders to Proceed to Venice to Await Kaiser.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY. EMPEROR WILLIAM, for the first time since the outbreak of the war between Italy and Turkey, three years ago, is about to revisit the Mediterranean. The Imperial yacht is under orders to proceed next week from Kiel to Venice, to await the Kaiser, while Professor Doerpfeld, former director of the German Archaeological Academy at Athens, has already arrived at Corfu, to arrange for the excavations on the site of an ancient temple, in the vicinity of the Emperor's villa of Achilleon, and where some remarkable finds were made in the presence of the Emperor, during his last stay on the island.

From Corfu Emperor William will proceed on board his yacht to Athens, in order to attend the celebration, not of the marriage, but of the solemn betrothal, of his nephew, the Crown Prince of Greece, to Princess Elizabeth of Roumania, which is to take place there with considerable pomp and ceremony, during the last ten days of next month. The Kaiser wishes to be the first of the foreign sovereigns to call upon Constantine, on his accession, and to visit Athens, since that war by means of which Greece managed to almost double both her territory and her population.

Among all the untitled aristocracy of England, there are few families that can boast of bluer blood or of a more historic ancestry than that of the Welfs, of Lulworth Castle, in Dorsetshire, a family which has always remained true to the faith of its forefathers in medieval times, despite the persecution to which Roman Catholics were subjected in the

At the Little Theatre

MONDAY ONLY, Daniel Frohman will present Laura Sawyer and House Peters in "An Hour Before Dawn." A startling scientific detective play based on the astounding discovery of a powerful destructive force, which has recently created a sensation in the scientific world.

Weld would then be merged, and more or less lost in the unfamiliar title of Lord Fitzwaryn. Reginald Weld would never have dreamt of presenting his claims to the barony had he not been virtually forced to do so by the presentation of Sir Bourchier Wrey, who had contented with his barony, near 250 years old, yearned for a seat in the House of Lords. Reginald Weld was perfectly content that the barony of Fitzwaryn should remain in abeyance for further centuries to come, but he was not disposed to permit it to be usurped by Sir Bourchier Wrey.

There is no doubt that the late Sir Bourchier Park Wrey, eighth baronet of his line, who flourished in the early part of the nineteenth century, was the principal coher to the barony of Fitzwaryn. Now this particular baronet married in 1818 a very beautiful Irish housemaid, in the service of his sister, Lady Park, on the understanding that she was a widow. She bore him three daughters, Ellen, Emily and Georgina, both of the latter dying unmarried. After the birth of these three girls, a man of the name of Riddle turned up, a former soldier, who claimed to be Lady Wrey's first husband. At the time when she married Sir Bourchier Wrey, she had been without hearing from Riddle for some seven or eight years, and had received news of his death, consequently had wedded Sir Bourchier Wrey in good faith.

The reappearance of Riddle, however, to have the effect of rendering Sir Bourchier's marriage invalid, and his three daughters illegitimate. Riddle died in 1832, as a pensioner on the bounty of Sir Bourchier, and the latter thereupon went through another ceremony of marriage with his children's mother. Not until a year afterwards did he ascertain that Riddle's own marriage to the housemaid had been invalid and annulled, since he had a wife living at the time, consequently that Sir Bourchier's marriage in 1818 to the housemaid was perfectly lawful, that the children whom she had borne him were legitimate and that the second marriage ceremony of 1832 had been superfluous. The eldest of these three children of Sir Bourchier Wrey and of his housemaid wife and the only one who left any descendants, namely, Ellen Wrey, married Edward Joseph Weld, of Lulworth Castle, Reginald Weld, the claimant to the barony of Fitzwaryn is her eldest son, and through her heir to the rights of his grandfather, Sir Bourchier Wrey, eighth baronet, to the Fitzwaryn peerage. Sir Bourchier was succeeded in the Wrey baronetcy by his half-brother, from whom the present baronet is descended.

If the late Edward Weld, who married Ellen Wrey, was owner of Lulworth Castle, and of all the extensive estates of the Weld family, it was because his elder brother, Thomas, had surrendered them to him on the death of his wife, when he entered the priesthood, being ordained by Mgr. Quelen, Archbishop of Paris. His rise in the church was rapid, and before six years were past he was consecrated Coadjutor Bishop of Kingston, in Upper Canada. Four years later while visiting Rome with his married daughter, Lady Clifford of Chichester, he was raised to the Sacred College by Pius VIII, as cardinal priest, and may, therefore, be regarded as Canada's first cardinal, Cardinal Taschereau being the second.

Cardinal Weld reposes in the Church of St. Maria, in Aquino, in Rome, where his tomb, a very stately affair, is an object of much interest to visitors. The present Lord Clifford, of Chichester, a familiar figure on this side of the Atlantic, and who has a brother living in Manitoba, can, therefore, boast of being the only member of the House of Lords who is descended from a member of the Sacred College, being a great-grandson of Cardinal Weld.

Every visitor to Berlin knows Kroll, who for just seventy years has been the principal place of popular entertainment in the Kaiser's capital, not taking of the nature of Luna Park, at Coney Island, N. Y., of Madison Square Garden, and of the Winter Garden in New York. The present generation knows it more, especially the scene of popular summer operas, and of some of the finest ballets ever given in Berlin. But in former times it was a favorite resort for public and semi-public balls. It was there that the carnival was seen each year at its gayest and at its best. It was the one place of amusement in Berlin where royalty, the aristocracy, and the bourgeoisie, some of the most celebrated farces ever seen on the banks of the Spree have been produced at Kroll's, and long is the list of brilliant and successful playwrights who have first won fame and fortune at Kroll's.

Berlin, however, like other great capitals, is on the move, and whereas Kroll's in 1811 was in the centre, so to speak, of the city, it is now remote from everything, especially from the pleasure-loving world. The result is that it has now been compelled to close its doors.

If I call attention to the fact, it is because it may be said to have owed its origin to the most pious and intensely religious monarch who ever ruled over Prussia. It was King Frederick William IV., who not only furnished old Kroll with a site, free of cost, on the Koenigsplatz, but also provided the greater amount of the capital needed for the creation of the resort in 1810. He had learned to know Kroll at Breslau, when he was in garrison there as crown prince.

MANY CITIZENS PAY ADDITIONAL TRIBUTE TO CHARLES LINCOLN SMITH

Expert Refractionist, Who Continues His Work Here, Eulogized By People of All Classes, and Achieves Most Notable Success.

In the public print have appeared many expressions of gratitude from thankful and enthusiastic patrons, who, until his coming, had been unable to obtain much relief. They have come from people in all walks of life, and bear the ring of truth and the stamp of loving appreciation and gratitude. They are loud in their praise for the method and prescription glasses of Charles Lincoln Smith.

CHARLES LINCOLN SMITH, Refractionist, Richmond, Va.

Rooms Nos. 100-101-102 Murphy's Hotel Annex, at Eighth and Broad Streets—Eighty Street entrance, take elevator—continues to give consultation free each day of the week between the hours of 10 A. M. and 4 P. M.

Son of United States Mail Carrier. Maurice Percival, member Junior, third year, at Richmond College, secretary of the Mu Sigma Rho society, whose father, M. Q. Percival, a valuable employee of the United States government, for more than ten years with the Richmond postoffice and Manchester United States postoffice for nearly two decades, residence No. 312 Bainbridge Street, is most enthusiastic at the marvelous work done by Charles Lincoln Smith. Mr. Percival states that since I was ten years old my eyes pained, itched and burned severely as soon as I would read or study any length of time; I would have frontal headaches. It caused me much misery. When I was about ten years old my mother took me to what is then considered the best here in the city. I worked some time and gave me glasses which helped me very much, but the trouble seemed to stay with me, for two or three years later the trouble returned. Then I tried three other different ones, but I could get no permanent relief.

A year ago this winter, Charles Lincoln Smith used his method and prescription glasses on my sister, Miss Mary Percival, who is a school teacher. His method proved such a complete success in her case that father determined I ought to try what Charles Lincoln Smith could do for me. And I want to say that this man's method is by far the best yet.

My eyes never hurt at all now, and studying as much as I do, almost night and day, if he had not thoroughly corrected the difficulty I certainly would suffer as bad as ever. But now my eyesight is better than the average person's, and the beauty of it is I don't know I have on glasses at all.

"Yes, they wanted to take my eye ball out. You see, I was blind in my right eye and the other one was in fact the light of my life. I can tell you how I suffered." These were the words of Mrs. W. S. Butler, wife of W. S. Butler, connected with C. W. Hardwick & Co., 121 North Thirty-sixth Street, Richmond. "In my case Charles Lincoln Smith performed a feat, little short of a miracle. I had a cataract growing on my eye, and it reached such proportions that it was a matter of time before it would have entirely gone. This was seven years ago. During that time I went to specialists, some of whom told me that it was useless, while others stated that the cataract could be removed by a surgical operation. I was unwilling to undergo anything of the kind, and finally my other eye became affected, and I had to stop reading entirely. Year after year this went on until I had almost given up hope.

"Then I heard of the great discovery of Charles Lincoln Smith, and on February 18, 1913, I called to see him. He told me right off he could fix me up and seemed to divine right away what a tremendous struggle I had gone through with. After working on me for just three days, the eye that was affected was well and I could read perfectly. Then he began working on the eye that was totally blind. When he took charge of my case the eye was perfectly dead. I could not even move it. Do you know that in two weeks I could turn the eye just as though it were well, and now I can plainly see light and moving objects with my blind eye. My headache and eye pain and discomforts are gone and I can say that I am the happiest woman alive. Do you blame me for being thankful to the man who has given me back my sight? Charles Lincoln Smith's method and prescription glasses have done all this for me."

A Virginian Farmer. W. L. Yourex, a wealthy land owner, of Providence Forge, Va., in talking of his recovery of his normal self through the method and prescription glasses applied by Charles Lincoln Smith, said: "I suffered nearly all the time from headaches and neuralgia and watering of my eyes. I really didn't know what the trouble was. I went to my family physician, and he gave me medicine, but it didn't seem to help me any. Do you know that when I would get out of bed and stoop over to the shoes it seemed that I couldn't straighten up my head. He also said, 'When at work and leaned over I would almost fall on my face.' Finally my doctor told me to see a specialist, and I saw him. He gave me a pair of Charles Lincoln Smith's glasses, and after a few days, those pains had all disappeared, and the use of his method and prescription glasses, I am just as good as new. I tell you it is great to feel good once more, and I am truly thankful for the great benefit I have derived from this man's skill. My sight is now fine. I never saw anything like it in my life. And I feel that life has become worth while. Am I satisfied with my investment? He remarked, 'Well I should say so!'"

Highly Grateful With Hesitancy. Dr. and Mrs. T. W. Harris, the former, for many years, prominent in the professional circles of Littleton, N. C., man, to elect delegates to the convention to be held in Bristol on March 18 to nominate a candidate for Congress for the Ninth District.

but of late years retired, and now a resident of Richmond, residing at 1127 Park Avenue, tells a wonderful story of the great benefit derived from Charles Lincoln Smith. Dr. Harris said: "I have been a sufferer with my left eye for more than seven years, and, finally, about gave up hope."

A brilliant man, intellectual and a great reader, the doctor was in despair. "I went to specialists in every section of the country, including Baltimore, and had an operation performed. The specialist who performed the operation did not make a success, and my eye was practically gone. The suffering was intense. Sleepless nights with swollen eyelids, and in tears for several years, until a specialist of my native town recommended Charles Lincoln Smith. I placed myself in his hands, and after having had his method and prescription glasses a short while, my eye trouble disappeared.

Doctor Harris states that now he can read and enjoy life as though nothing had ever happened to his eyes. "Nothing too good can be said about Charles Lincoln Smith," he declared. "He is the greatest man I have ever had the pleasure of knowing, and I cannot express the gratitude I feel for him for what he has done for my life and myself."

Mrs. Harris, a charming little woman, when asked about her experience, smiled and said: "I cannot tell you just what I think of him. Words cannot express my feelings for the magnificent work he has done for me, and the suffering from which he has relieved us. You know I do quite a bit of sewing, embroidery and such, and several years ago I began having trouble with my eyesight. I went to several specialists, and they would put this stuff into my eyes, but it seemed that I could get no relief. I tried several other things, but nothing seemed to help. When I went to Charles Lincoln Smith I found that his new method had no connection with drugs. He didn't touch my eyes or give me pain like the others. It was wonderful. I sincerely wish that it had been discovered long ago. After I put the glasses on, the trouble disappeared. I had been told that the strain upon them appeared to vanish like magic, that my vision was much clearer, and the drawn sensation around the edges of the eye disappeared. This great improvement, though, was almost as nothing to the complete change which followed within the next few days.

"I haven't had a headache since, my eyes feel as they did when I was a child; the blurring of vision has disappeared, and my nervousness has entirely vanished, and I have never had a bit of trouble since. He has done so much for me that I just want to tell everybody I see with eye trouble what a skilled man he is, for he did more for me than I can ever thank him for."

A Well Known Quarryman's Wife. "I don't see just how I can say enough in praise of Charles Lincoln Smith," said Mrs. J. F. Crawford, the wife of J. F. Crawford, one of the foremost quarrymen of this section of the State, of 316 North Twenty-seventh Street, Richmond. Mrs. Crawford smiled complacently as she told and adjusted the glasses which she wore. Her husband has for many years been connected with the quarry industry near Richmond, and is well known in this city.

The unpleasant features of Mrs. Crawford's case were, and are very common, and are generally thought to proceed from other causes, but she was blind with the eyes. She said yesterday, in speaking of what she had suffered, and how she had been relieved by Charles Lincoln Smith, that for six years I had constant headache, and was in a wretched state of nerves, with stomach troubles besides, so that I was utterly unfit for household or social duties of any kind. Every time I went anywhere, and especially if riding in street cars, to church, theatres or any place whatever, or in any vehicle, I came back with aching eyes and headache, which developed into a regular ailment. My husband and I heard of Charles Lincoln Smith and, finally, we came to see him. You can see for yourself what his method and prescription glasses have done for me, and you know, my husband was so delighted that he got himself some reading glasses. No he has not had serious trouble, but he could read very well at night, but now he can, and he is thoroughly satisfied.

About myself? Well, I had just lots of trouble. It seemed that I had pains in my head all the time, and my neighbors began telling me about Charles Lincoln Smith and his wonderful discovery, and now, and she smiled benevolently, "I can see to read and sew just as good as I could when I was many years younger, and my headaches and eye nerve trouble have disappeared entirely."

Beyond Her Fondest Hopes. "I just had an awful time with my eyesight," said Mrs. Bettie Crostie, of 200 East Sixth Street, South Richmond. A charming matron, Mrs. Crostie told a remarkable tale of defective eyesight. "It seemed as if a cloud would come over my eyes at times. Why, I tried everything. I went to one specialist daily for months and months, but with drugs, electricity and glasses, I got no relief. I used to suffer with my head, eyes and temples. Seemed as if there were pins sticking into them. Then I would try some other one. I heard of, but it seemed that I could get no benefit. Why, I have been wanting to get before Charles Lincoln Smith, but seemed every time he was here I was under some one's care, and could not get up the resolution to change. But, my! Now I realize that the past six years suffering could have been averted. Thanks to Charles Lincoln Smith's method and glasses, I made a shirt waist last week, threaded my own needle and everything. How's that for a woman? That could not see to go out alone. Now I go alone and read the signs on the street cars same as I did before my sight commenced to bother me. There was great happiness in my family. I began to enjoy life. You know when I finished the shirt waist, why it even extended all around the neighborhood. I had been such a bother to my family, and now I am alone. Now the blurring and pain of my eyes have disappeared. His success in my case is beyond my fondest hopes."

Charles Lincoln Smith's exclusive method his own discovery—Advertisement thinking people everywhere—Advertisement.

Havens will make the race under the conditions that he will have no belief in the possibility of the flight.

DEMOCRATS GET TOGETHER

Party in Wythe Indorses Woodrow Wilson and Governor Stuart.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] A mass meeting of the Democrats of Wythe County was held to-day at the courthouse, on the call of the county chairman, to elect delegates to the convention to be held in Bristol on March 18 to nominate a candidate for Congress for the Ninth District.

The meeting was presided over by Judge W. E. Fulton, and the different districts separated and selected delegates who were reported to and confirmed by the general meeting.

A resolution, indorsing in the fullest degree the administration of President Wilson, was adopted unanimously, as was also one indorsing Governor Stuart, and especially his idea of economy in the expenditure of public money.

No mention was made of any candidate, but the sense of the meeting being the selection of the best and most efficient
